OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

The market saw the Bureau of Treasury taking the opportunity of illiquid market trading, it conducted a bond-swap exchange which consequently able to generate further interest savings. The illiquid off-the run bonds across the curve were exchanged with new 10-year and 25-year bonds with coupon rates of 3.625% and 4.625% respectively. The swap ended in a success and was able to reissue around PHP 300 billion worth of bonds.

Inflation during the third quarter reached historic lows. From 1.20% increase year-on-year last June, CPI growth printed only 0.80% in July and 0.60% in August, the lowest that the country has seen in the last 20 years. However, economic managers forecast that low inflation might just be temporary due to the impact of this year's El Nino phenomenon to agricultural goods.

While the government had supplied new benchmark bonds, and with inflation currently in its historic lows, bond trading still seems to be muted on the back of global uncertainty regarding China's growth prospects, as well as the U.S. Federal reserve scenario of possibly raising rates in the fourth quarter of 2015. With the 10-year benchmark yield traded down by an estimated 30 basis points from 4.24% to 3.93%, the effective yield of the new 10-year bond (FXTN 10-60) jumped by 10 basis points from 3.63% to 3.73%. Similarly, the new 25-year bond (FXTN 25-11) traded above by 10 basis points from its coupon which is currently trading around 4.72%-4.76% yield level. This suggests that market players were converting their bonds into cash, thus preferring to stay in the sidelines until headwinds from both global and local sources are cleared. Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas, for its part, have stated that rates might remain unchanged for the rest of 2015 as they evaluate their policy.
