OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

The Peso closed flat against the dollar following the faster March inflation print. The local currency ended last April 5's session at P52.115 versus the dollar, almost flat from the P52.12-per-greenback finish on previous day's trading. The peso moved sideways throughout the trading session, opening slightly weaker at P52.125. Its worst showing stood at P52.16, while its intraday high was at P52.09. Dollars traded slid to $483 million from $504.4 million.

The 10-year Treasury yield snaps fourth straight session of decline as stocks rebound. Treasury prices grinded lower last April 3 trading, pushing up yields, as U.S. stocks rebounded, unwinding haven-relating buying of government debt after a tech-led rout at the start of the week. A sharp stock-market selloff on Monday prompted buying of Treasury's, pushing the yield on the 10-year note to its lowest since Jan. 31. Escalating trade tensions with China and President Donald Trump's criticisms of tech giant Amazon.com Inc. AMZN, -0.28% were blamed for the broad decline.

Maturing dollar investments shall be deployed to new ROP issuances of the government or higher yielding medium-term dollar time deposit.
