OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

The local unit closed the first session of the year at P52.515 versus the dollar, 6.5 centavos stronger than its P52.58-per-greenback finish last Dec. 28, 2018. This was the peso's best close in almost a month or since it ended at P52.32 per dollar last Dec. 3.

The peso opened (Jan. 02, 2019) Wednesday's session at P52.50 versus the US currency, which was also its best showing for the day. Meanwhile, it slid to as low as P52.63 per dollar intraday. Trading volume thinned to $580.05 million from the $664.4 million that switched hands from previous week.

Analysts said that the peso strengthened versus the dollar, mimicking the strength of other emerging market economies on the back of "strong US-China news." In a congratulatory message on Jan. 01, 2019 marking the 40th anniversary of Sino-US diplomatic relations, Chinese President Xi Jinping told US President Donald J. Trump that cooperation is the best choice for both countries, Reuters reported. The world's two biggest economies agreed last month to a 90-day temporary ceasefire in imposing tit-for-tat levies against each other's imports. Officials from Washington are also reported to travel to Beijing early this month to discuss trade-related concerns to the Chinese government.

Analyst's forecast on USD/PHP for 2019 is at P54.00.
