OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

March proved to be a challenging month for local equities as gains year-to-date have been wiped out. The breakout of conflict in the Middle East, expected higher inflation due to surge in pump prices, and significant foreign outflows from emerging markets all contributed to the decline of the PSEi. The sell-off was broad-based and heavy, with all sectors in the red, mining and oil names led the rout and foreign outflows ballooned alongside thinning liquidity. Market was dominated by an intensifying energy shock narrative, with the Middle East conflict driving a sharp surge in global oil prices that is now cascading across policy, inflation expectations, currency, and corporate strategy. For March, the index closed at 5,948.94 (-10.02% / -662.30 pts).

The Fund has outperformed its benchmark by 0.70% on a month-on-month basis and but has outperformed by 3.85% on a year-to-date basis.

In the near term, it's still all about oil and geopolitics, but now with a slightly clearer local policy anchor. BSP's decision to pause at 4.25% in an off-cycle meeting signals a more cautious stance amid rising global uncertainty and oil-driven inflation risks. This reinforces a wait-and-see mode, but suggests that rate cuts may not be as imminent as previously hoped. This might mean that liquidity may remain thin and potential upside may be capped, especially if crude stays elevated. Key things to look out for will be any credible de-escalation in the Middle East. For now, we do see a choppy, headline-driven trading, with the 6,000 level as a key barometer.
